The history of the Sanremo Music Festival goes back over 70 years. It has been among the most popular song contests in the world and even inspired the creation of the Eurovision Song Contest. The Sanremo Music Festival marked the beginning of the careers of many famous Italian singers, such as Andrea Bocelli, Paola e Chiara, Laura Pausini and Gigliola Gigliola Cinquetti. This festival has been one of the main cultural events in Italy, and it has become one of the symbols of Italy for the rest of the world. The small town of Sanremo has become known throughout the world thanks to the festival.

The line-up consists of talented Italian singers: Chiara Luppi, Gianni Scribano, Lara Pasquali and Stefano Bersola, as well as conductor maestro Dan Rapoport.

Dan Rapoport is the conductor and artistic director of the Quadrivium Ensemble in Venice, Italy. From 2000 to 2013, he was the Principal Guest Conductor with the Florence Symphonietta. He has conducted in Italian opera houses and with orchestras around the world, including in Israel.

Chiara Luppi is a singer and actress. She sang a duet with Umberto Tozzi on the song "Si può dare di più" from the album Yesterday, Today. She performed in the musical "Romeo and Juliet" directed by Riccardo Cocciante. She competed in the youth category of the Sanremo Music Festival with the song "Per un attimo".

Gianni Scribano is a singer, pianist and composer. During his long career, Gianni has performed thousands of concerts: from appearances at the Arena di Verona amphitheater in front of an audience of 10,000 people and the Fellahvala Auditorium in Turin to world tours with the musical Romeo and Juliet. He is also the artistic director and the lead singer of the music show Avanspettacolo.

Lara Pasquali is a singer and actress. Her unique voice reveals her range in a variety of genres: from pop to jazz to soul and gospel. She often participates in television productions: Saturday Night Live, The Winner Is, Run Tune Up con Gianni Morandi and many others.

Stefano Bersola is a singer. Since 1998, Stefano's voice was featured in dozens of films, TV shows and series that were broadcast online. Thanks to numerous recordings, he gained popularity on the international stage and had releases on international record labels: Amazon Prime Video, Yamato Video, Sony Music, Warner Music.
